HORACE

WALLSHELVES

*With Horace wall shelves, ibride depicts the image
of a chance encounter
– a wild animal surprised by Man*

Mural and agile, the new creation by Benoit Convers represent the unexpected incursion of nature in the most incongruous places
As you wander along a path, the silence is suddenly broken. You hear the cracking of twigs, the rustle of leaves, perhaps even the trembling of stones.
You stop. Just for one moment – and nothing moves. Then suddenly appear a pair of antlers, not moving but standing upright on the head of a chamois, alert to your slightest gesture. He peers at you, his body perched on the mountainside, before suddenly scampering away.
This acrobatic piece of furniture pays homage to the agility of the chamois and, with its domination of space, bears witness to the true grandeur of nature.

The animal standing on a wall at the dizzying height of over 2,000 metres is a reminder that nature has the upper hand over us and will always do so. In both the form and the movement they suggest, these wall shelves become a veritable sculpture.
