

MOR Design presents the SPOT Bowl by Pedro Sottomayor

Some pieces are created to belong, to merge seamlessly with their environment through proportion, material, and intention. The SPOT Bowl, designed by Pedro Sottomayor for MOR Design, is one such object: a study in quiet presence and form.

For design-minded individuals who care for the aesthetic of their space, SPOT transforms ordinary storage into a quiet moment of design, a piece that complements refined interiors while keeping life's essentials within reach.

Handcrafted in sustainably finished natural leather, it transforms an everyday container into a sculptural presence. Its measured geometry and soft curves embody a sense of functionality, where beauty arises from restraint.

The new piece will be available for pre-order starting November 13th, with public sales beginning November 19th. The launch reinforces MOR Design's commitment to creating pieces that combine timeless materials, artisanal craftsmanship, and architectural clarity.

Each SPOT Bowl is shaped by hand, using traditional leatherworking techniques that honors the individuality of the material. With time, its surface acquires a soft patina, deepening in tone and texture. What begins as a pure, minimal form evolves into something more personal, a reflection of care, presence, and daily ritual. The SPOT Bowl is not merely an accessory, but a study in balance and enduring beauty.
