The Artisans Behind HeWhoMe.Tokyo

Stylish, durable, and comfortable shoes are essential to any wardrobe.
For discerning shoe lovers, HeWhoMe.Tokyo offers custom-made shoes, carefully handcrafted using authentic vintage kimono fabrics.
Kimono are traditional Japanese garments made from high-quality textiles, often decorated with beautiful flowers and birds.
They uniquely combine elegance and refinement, creating a timeless aesthetic found nowhere else.
Because each kimono is genuine, its patterns and colors make every pair of shoes truly one of a kind.
This dedication to quality is at the heart of every HeWhoMe.Tokyo sneaker.
At HeWhoMe.Tokyo, we strictly follow careful material sourcing, thoughtful design, and precise production processes to deliver shoes of the highest quality.

How HeWhoMe.Tokyo Shoes Are Made

The shoemaking process begins with the creation of the first sample.
Patterns are cut according to the design, shoes are assembled, and models test the fit.
Second and third samples are refined until the final prototype is completed.
It is often said that a shoe consists of 108 individual parts, each contributing to its final form.

At the core of this process is the creation of the last, carved to match the shape of the foot.
The last is the soul of a shoemaker—an accumulation of experience, skill, and knowledge built over many years.

Using patterns shaped along the last, artisans hand-cut the materials.
They carefully examine the kimono fabric, removing imperfections while skillfully positioning the patterns to preserve their beauty.
For custom-made shoes, each piece is cut individually by hand using a traditional knife.。

Next comes “Seikō,” the stitching of the upper.Kimono fabric and leather are precisely sewn together to create a comfortable upper with refined details and lasting durability.

The next and most iconic stage is “Sokozuke.”

Here, the upper is shaped over the last by hand, using specialized tools and a hammer to transform flat materials into a three-dimensional form.

The nail holes created during this process are a hallmark of fine, high-end footwear.

At this stage, the shoe is nearly complete.

The sole is attached using a press, the last is removed, and the shoe is passed to a finishing artisan who cleans, polishes, and perfects every detail.

Each pair of HeWhoMe.Tokyo shoes is handled with great care.Before shipping, every shoe undergoes strict inspection for visible imperfections and is carefully packaged.
