

Why We Package Our Tea in Individual Sachets

At Lili's Tea, we believe that every cup of tea should taste as fresh, aromatic, and vibrant as the day the leaves were picked.

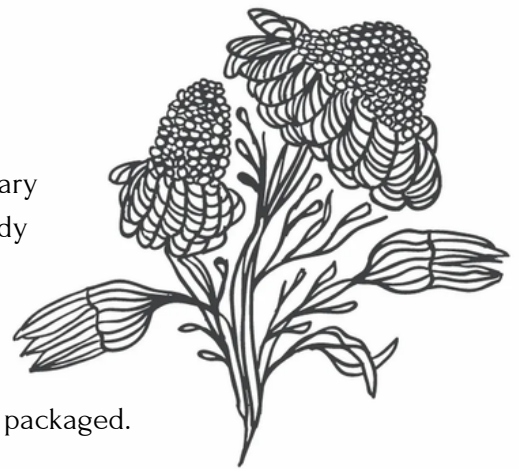

That's why we carefully package our teas in individual sachets, to preserve what matters most: quality, freshness, and flavour.

Freshness, sealed in

Tea leaves are naturally sensitive to oxygen. By packaging each portion individually, we help limit oxidation and protect the delicate aromas and flavours within the leaves.

The result? A fresh, consistent cup of tea. Every single time.

Individual sachets also ensure the perfect portion for each cup, helping us maintain consistent quality while avoiding unnecessary waste. And because each sachet remains sealed until you're ready to brew, your tea stays clean, protected, and uncompromised.

Packaging with a purpose

We believe that caring for tea also means caring about how it is packaged.

That's why our mono boxes are 100% plastic-free, made from lightweight cardboard. Our individual sachets are made from plant-based corn fibres, offering a thoughtful alternative while keeping the tea protected and fresh.

From Sri Lanka, with care

Our story begins where the tea grows.

From handpicked tea leaves to the final packaging, everything takes place on site in Sri Lanka. By keeping the process close to the source, we can preserve the freshness and character of our tea while supporting local communities and the people who make every cup possible.

For us, every detail matters.

From the leaf to the sachet, from the source to your cup. We package our tea individually because great tea deserves to be protected.

Freshness preserved. Quality uncompromised.
